

GENDER IDENTITY DISCRIMINATION

Chicago's Human Rights Ordinance and Fair Housing Ordinance prohibit discrimination based on gender identity.

Gender identity is defined as the actual or perceived appearance, expression, identity, or behavior of a person as being male or female—whether or not it is different from what is traditionally associated with the person's designated sex at birth.

Prohibiting gender identity discrimination protects people who are considered transgender, who are in transition from one gender to another, who do not appear clearly male or female, or who display characteristics not typically associated with their assigned gender. Such individuals are often subjected to ridicule, exclusion, and hate crimes.

For example, it may be an ordinance violation—

- For a business to subject a customer to derogatory slurs, ridicule, and other unwelcome verbal or physical conduct because of the person's gender identity.
- For a business to deny a customer access to a restroom or similar private facility designated for the gender shown on the person's official identification—such as a driver's license, state identification card or passport.
- For an employer to refuse to hire, promote, or provide equal treatment to an applicant or employee because of the person's gender identity.
- For a business or employer to question a person about gender identity in ways that are not legitimate or reasonable.
- For a housing provider to refuse to sell or rent, or in other ways limit equal access to available housing because of a person's gender identity.

Business operators may be held liable for discriminatory conduct of their employees.

Penalties for violations of the Human Rights or Fair Housing Ordinance include—

- Fines of $100 to $500 per incident, paid to the City.
- Damages and attorney fees, paid to the complaining party.
- An injunction ordering specific actions to eliminate discriminatory practices.

Discriminatory conduct may also violate state or federal laws. A finding of discrimination may affect the continued licensure of a business by the City of Chicago as well as City contractor or vendor status.

A person who claims to have been subjected to discriminatory treatment based on gender identity may file a discrimination complaint at the Commission on Human Relations. The Commission may also initiate a complaint. The Commission investigates and rules on each discrimination complaint through a neutral process which gives complainants and respondents the opportunity to present evidence and legal arguments to support their positions.
