MAYOR EMANUEL NAMES DEBORAH QUAZZO TO SERVE AS A MEMBER OF THE CHICAGO BOARD OF EDUCATION

Quazzo Brings Unique Combination of Local and National Experience as a Lifelong Advocate for Quality Education

Mayor Rahm Emanuel today named Deborah Quazzo to serve as a member of the Chicago Board of Education. A life-long advocate for providing children with an education that prepares them for college, career and life, Quazzo will help the Board work to ensure Chicago's students have access to the high-quality education they deserve.

“Deborah has been a strong advocate for students throughout her career and personal life, from supporting innovative ideas for improving education to providing one-on-one mentorship to students,” said Mayor Emanuel. “Deborah brings a valuable perspective that will help make sure we can provide all of our students with a path to a bright future.”

Quazzo, a small business owner, is founder and managing partner of GSV Advisors, a firm that provides advisory services to companies in the education and business services sectors. GSV Advisors also works with Arizona State University, the nation's largest public university, to co-host the annual ASU GSV Education Innovation Summit which celebrates innovations and innovators across the education sector from early childhood to lifelong learning.

“Improving education for Chicago's children requires everyone to share responsibility – from parents to educators to the community,” said Quazzo. “I am honored to have the chance to serve the students of Chicago through the Board of Education and look forward to working with stakeholders across the spectrum to achieve our shared goal of providing every child with a high-quality education.”

She is the chair of the board of Marwen, a visual arts education provider for underserved Chicago youth; is an ex officio board member of The Chicago Public Education Fund and previously served on the boards of New Schools for Chicago and the Network for Teaching Entrepreneurship (NFTE), and America’s Promise Alliance, an organization that is committed to seeing that children get the resources they need in order to ensure they are prepared for college and a modern economy. In these roles, Quazzo has championed programs and initiatives that promote professional development for teachers, tackle truancy, infuse the arts into education, and work to increase the nationwide college graduation rate.

“Deborah presents a diverse knowledge of both education and sound fiscal practice that will help her be a strong voice on the Board and we welcome this appointment,” said David Vitale, President of the Board of Education. “With her firm commitment to Chicago’s students, coupled with her experience as a strategic advisor, she will be a great asset as we continue to work to provide every child with a quality education.”
